1992, published by ILO, India has probably the largest number of working children. However, authentic data on Child Labour arc generated from the decennial census. As per 1991 census the number of working children in India is 11.28 million as against 13.6 million according to 1981 census.

(b) to (d) According to the news paper report a workshop on "Primary Education and Child Labour was organised by SACCS (South-Asian Coalition of Child Servitude) in New Delhi on 1st Nov., 97, wherein emphasis was laid on the need for achieving universal primary education. Government have taken a scries of steps for the elimination of Child Labour working in hazardous occupations. Under the Child Labour (Prohibition & Regulation) Act, 1986, employment of children is prohibited in 7 occupations and 18 processes contained in parts A and B of the scheduled to the Act. There arc also legal provisions in various other labour laws safeguarding the interests of working children. Apart from legal measures, Government have taken steps for withdrawal and rehabilitation of child labour working in hazardous occupations. 76 child labour projects have been set up for the rehabilitation of around 1.5 lakh children working in hazardous occupations. A major activity undertaken under the child labour projects is the establishment of special schools to provide non-formal education, vocational training, supplementary nutrition etc, to children withdrawn from employment. As the available information, around 1.05 lakh children are already enrolled in the special schools. Besides opening of child labour projects, funds have been sanctioned for carrying out survey on child labour in 516 distrsicts and for awareness generation against the evil of child labour in 133 districts. Various initiatives have been taken by the Government for universalisation of elementary eduction and for providing free and compulsory education to all children upto the age of 14 years.
